“My life isn’t all just paraphrasing people funnier than me.” “Television is as healthy as exercise.” “All I want is to be loved and adored by every single living thing.” These are some of the inscriptions on a new group of paintings by the New York artist, sports enthusiast, and Twitter presence Andrew Kuo, opening at Marlborough Chelsea in the cleverly titled show “No to Self,” opening Thursday night. The works combine a striking sense for color and geometry with a dryly (if you will) self-deprecating message.
